More About America the Beautiful: Called one of the most important documentaries in recent years, Darryl Roberts makes his feature documentary debut with this award winning unexpectedly witty and affecting exposé of the American beauty industry. Starting out as an essay on contemporary male attitudes about female beauty, the film expands into an examination of the larger societal forces that influence and reinforce those attitudes, particularly the synergy between fashion magazines, advertising and modeling agencies, plastic surgeons, and the cosmetics industry. The narrative thread that holds all of this together is the devastating account of a 12-year-old fashion model's decline from fashion superstar to unwanted has-been.
